ABSTRACT

Introduction: Plaque removal is of utmost importance for control of dental caries and other associated diseases of oral cavity. However, various natural agents have proven their efficacy over chemotherapeutic agents in terms of antibacterial activity against various microorganisms. The effect is mainly due to polyphenol as its major constituent. Aim: In this in vitro study, we aimed to determine the antibacterial efficacy of Trachyspermum ammi oil at different concentrations against five oral bacteria. Hypothesis: Herbal compound, T. ammi oil is effective in reducing five oral plaque-forming bacteria. Materials and Methods: We determined the antimicrobial activity of T. ammi oil (test material) against chlorhexidine (gold standard). Pure cultures of Streptococcus mutans MTCC No 497, Streptococcus oralis MTCC No. 2696, Lactobacillus acidophilus MTCC No. 10307, Lactobacillus fermentum MTCC No. 903, and Candida albicans MTCC No. 183 were obtained and grown in selective culture media. Minimum inhibitory concentration (MIC) and minimum bactericidal concentration (MBC) of both materials were evaluated by serial dilution and disc diffusion method, respectively. Results: Our results revealed that T. ammi oil moderately inhibits bacterial growth with mean MIC of 250, 125, 250, 125, and 250 µg/ml, respectively. Mean MBC for T. ammi oil obtained was 18.60 ± 0.65, 11.60 ± 1.14, 14.10 ± 0.55, 11.50 ± 0.61, and 15.10 ± 0.74 mm. The MIC and MBC values were higher as compared to chlorhexidine gluconate and it was statistically significant. Conclusion: T. ammi (ajwain) can serve as a potential, natural, nontoxic, and economical therapeutic antiplaque agent.

Introduction

Dental caries is the most common and transmissible disease of childhood having high prevalence all over the world is a multifactorial disease caused due to occurrence and interaction between dental biofilm and oral microflora. This microflora includes primary colonizers as well as secondary colonizers, of which Streptococcus mutans and Streptococcus oralis are one of the early colonizers responsible for plaque formation. S. mutans is considered as bacteria with

Abstract Introduction: Numerous antimicrobial agents are used to eliminate oral biofilm. However due to emergence of multi drug resistant microorganisms, the quest to find out biologically safe and naturally available antimicrobial agents continues.

Aim: To evaluate antimicrobial efficacy of silver nano-particles against five common oral pathogenic bacteria.

Objective: To determine antimicrobial activity of silver nanoparticles and chlorhexidine gluconate against oral pathogenic bacteria.

Material and Method: We used strains of Streptococcus mutans (MTCC 497), Streptococcus oralis (MTCC 2696), Lactobacillus acidophilus (MTCC 10307), Lactobacillus fermentum (MTCC 903), and Candida albicans (MTCC 183). We used commercially available silver nanoparticles (experimental group) and chlorhexidine gluconate (positive control). We determined minimum inhibitory concentration (MIC) minimum bactericidal concentration (MBC) of both agents and analyzed the data using paired 't' test, one way ANOVA and Tucky's post Hoc HSD.
